

Mogens Grønvold

is Associate Professor at the Department of Health Sciences Research in Denmark. His research interests include the patient perspective in the development and evaluation of treatments, mainly in cancer and palliative medicine. Validity, reliability and other methodological issues in questionnaire-based research, design and methodology of health status assessment in clinical trials as well as integration of biomedical and patient-generated data about the effect of treatments.